

Transportation Infrastructure in Central Asia

Craig Jorgenson

The Sulphur Institute

Bulk cargo exports from the Central Asian countries are difficult considering the vast distances of road and rail transit to deep water ocean ports. In this presentation, we will look at the current state and future assessments of transportation policy and regulations; improvements to road and rail infrastructure; and an overview of trade relationships in the region, focusing primarily on those sulphur-producing countries.