The Sulphur Institute Adds Jorgenson to Senior Staff

WASHINGTON, DC, August 5, 2014 – The Sulphur Institute (TSI) announced today that Craig Jorgenson has joined its senior staff as director, transportation, regulatory affairs and operations. Jorgenson comes to TSI following a 25-year military career. “We are pleased to have Craig become a part of TSI’s team. His experience will add additional depth to our staff in our service to our constituents and industry,” remarked Robert McBride, TSI president and CEO.

Jorgenson brings to TSI vast experience in the intermodal transportation sector, past affiliation with non-profit associations, and global expertise in his field. During his career, he has led various teams focused on strategic planning and project management in aspects of logistics and supply chain operations. Jorgenson holds degrees from the University of Wisconsin-La Crosse, Indiana University and the National Defense University.

Founded in 1960, TSI represents all stakeholders actively engaged in producing, buying, selling, handling, transporting, or adding value to sulphur on a global basis.
