Sour Gas Projects Impacting Sulphur – Richard Hands

A review of the progress of a number of sour gas projects across the Middle East, Central Asia and China, which are collectively delivering a large boost in sulphur production; a boost which has pushed the market into surplus. But in a world of cheap oil and gas, are the additional costs that sour gas projects face still justifiable? Is this likely to be a one-time addition, or will it lead to a more sustained growth in sulphur output?
