TSI Elects Jack Cohn as Chair and Robert McBride as Vice Chair

WASHINGTON, DC, May 10, 2012 – The Sulphur Institute (TSI) recently held its annual meeting of the members and directors in Antwerp, Belgium, and elected Jack Cohn, Savage Services Corporation and Robert McBride, ExxonMobil Corporation as its chair and vice chair, respectively. The Sulphur Institute, an international association founded in 1960, represents all stakeholders actively engaged in producing, buying, selling, handling, transporting, or adding value to sulphur on a global basis.

Cohn believes the growth in TSI membership by 33% since 2008 as a clear-cut example of how TSI is demonstrating value to all sulphur stakeholders. In addition to elections, the membership reviewed important TSI accomplishments during the last year. Milestones achieved include advancements in sulphur fertilizer use in agriculture and benefits of working with various international entities, including government and non-government, such as the International Maritime Organization. Catherine Randazzo, TSI's president and CEO remarked, "Each year we analyze the dollar value TSI programs provide to the membership, and continually demonstrate the benefits above dues cost. Further, we illustrate what TSI can do as our industry's unified and clear voice."
